WOMEN AS TALKERS.

Useful Advice on the Secret of the Art of Conversation.

In spite of the reputation that women, as a sex, enjoy of being great talkers, comparatively few of them cultivate to any decided degree the art of conversation. They are apt to become so accustomed to their daily household life as to consider it the whole, not a part, of their existence, and they lose, as it were, their own identity and merge themselves into a housekeeper, or nurse, without any individuality of their own remaining. By many the fine arts of which they have previously made themselves masters are neglected and gradually fall into ignoble disuse. Why is it that so many as soon as they begin their married life discard their music or singing and never bestow a thought upon those accomplishments which soothe and elevate us and seem to rest a spirit frittered by the ceaseless turn of life? It is on this account that some women are apt to be tiresome when talking, for they rarely allow the stream of conversation to rise above the allotted bank of the commonplace. If the subjects be children, servants or dress the feminine tongues wag glibly, but turn the current aside from the well-worn channel and we soon perceive there are rocks in the course that disturb the smooth, pleasant flow. It is impossible for one to be interesting in conversation who wishes to see in the minds of others a mere reflection of their own; whose aim is not to evolve some new idea or open fresh avenues of thought, but present a constant repetition of nothing.

Of course it is not to be denied that a woman's proper sphere is her home; that the better she performs her duties to her family and friends the truer is she to her vocation in life. But it ought not to follow as a matter of course that because a woman is a good wife and mother that her whole conversation should savor of the meat that forms her daily diet. Women are apt to talk "shop," and the shop generally consists of their domestic concerns. As a consequence there are a great many needless babbles in the world; needless, I say, because unless there were some who could not appreciate persons who are really entertaining. Of the different specimens of the genus "babbler" there is none more distinctly marked than the woman who imagines she is eloquent. The small animals of the same kind, even the inevitable and long-winded gossip, pass into insignificance beside her. She is generally known as dealing largely in the flowers of rhetoric, laughing metaphor and simile with a prodigal hand, abounding in quotations and having a glowing look in the eye, as if she wished to be considered the inspired Pythia of Apollo's temple, or a bare-back rider on the winged Pegasus. For a good, old-fashioned, death-dealing, wound-up-for-a-whole-week and don't-stop-on-Sunday horse, command me to the woman who tries to be eloquent in ordinary conversation. Like the ancient Miriam, she "holds you with her glistening eye," and there is no escape from the ordeal.

Next to the feminine Demosthenes come the gossip who knows more about other people's affairs than they do themselves. There is not a skeleton hidden in a family closet but it is raked out and held up in the glowing light of publicity and exposed to the gaze of thousands of inquiring eyes. What a woman should aim in conversation is not only to entertain by giving her own thoughts, but at the same time to draw out those of others, especially the bashful and particularly bashful men. Nothing pleases a man so much, nothing gives him such an idea of his superiority, as to allow him an opportunity of imparting information, though he may not have penetration enough to discern that it is the tact of the woman that entices him into talking about what perhaps he knows less than she. I remember hearing it remarked of Mrs. Cleveland that she was a charming conversationalist because she always chose topics which she knew would interest others, and in this lies the whole secret of the art of conversing. A celebrated French woman, who had neither wealth, beauty nor position to elevate her in social circles, rose to the highest rank among the court during the latter day of royalty simply by her art of pleasing in her conversation. Brilliance in conversation is not the essential characteristic. Some of the most charming talkers are any thing but witty or learned; but the truth is we love to hear those speak who really feel what they say, whose words are choice without being studied and natural and easy without being childish or slangy. We love to listen to those whose minds, whose nobility of character, whose purity of soul shine in their conversation, and we feel that words are but the personification of the beauty within.—Chicago Times.

To Preserve Ropes.—To preserve ropes exposed to the weather from mold and mildew, one prepares a bath of dissolved copper-glaucine and water in the proportion of one drachm of dissolved copper-glaucine to three and one-half pints of water. Let the ropes soak in this mixture for four days; they will then be covered with a coating of copper-glaucine that effectually protects them from all kinds of animal enemies as well as from mold and mildew. To wash the mixture of copper one dips the rope in soap-water (seven ounces) and one-half pints of water.
